Training Session Day 1: Technical

DDoS Attacks: A Crash Course

Various DDoS attacks always pose a great challenge on the Internet, but recently, they have emerged as a major threat. Although the market offers an increasingly huge choice of means of protection, the urgency of the problem does not diminish. Thus, the first goal of the training is to understand what DDoS-attack is. The trainees will consider the taxonomy of DoS/DDoS attacks and analyze why each of them is possible. The second objective is to expose roles of parties involved into carrying out DoS/DDoS attacks. The class will be shown that a third-party company can participate in them unwillingly and unnoticed for itself. The third objective is to understand what can be done to protect oneself from such attacks (with a 100% protection rate hardly plausible). Also, the class will be briefly walked across new attack protection and prevention means.

The course is delivered by Alex Semenyaka, External Relations Officer for the RIPE NCC (Eastern Europe and Central Asia) helps lead the RIPE NCC’s engagement with membership, the RIPE community, technical bodies, academia, law enforcement and other Internet stakeholders across the former Soviet space. As a part of his mission, he interacts with internal stakeholders to enhance the RIPE NCC’s training activities.

Who should attend: CTOs, security officers (with technical background), technical staff, network engineers, developers

Business Intelligence: Data Visualisation and Tableau

NB: Prior to the session, trainees may wish to download the software at: LINK

As the range and power of business intelligence products has surged in the past few years, it’s important to ensure your organisation has the right skills in data visualisation as well as understand the tools available. This 90 min session is focused around good practices in data visualisation within the context of a BI tool (in this case, Tableau). The session will highlight and demonstrate the how good use of colour, labelling, chart choice and other visual aspects can help improve the story you tell with data. We will connect and create visualisations using these principles as well as highlight the power of using a BI tool within the registry business.

The training will be delivered by Patrick Myles (Net Knowledge)

Who should attend: CEOs, COOs, Marketing staff

Public Speaking and Argumentation Skills Training

As everyone is aware, public speaking and argumentation skills can help one advance one’s career, create opportunities, and reach a common understanding on your points of interest, and thus, get the desired. The training should enable attendees to deliver effective persuasive presentations.

The tailored course’s materials coupled with practical drills should allow trainees to become:
- clear (to be properly understood, one should target the audience and speak the same language);
- convincing (to sway people, arguments must be valid and sound);
- compelling (to take the desired action, people must be correctly motivated).

A blend of communication, rhetoric, linguistics, and argumentation, this course balances proven ideas with practical cases taken directly from the APTLD’s professional sphere.

The course is delivered by Prof. Dmitry V. Zaitsev, Dr. in Philosophy and Deputy Dean of the world-acclaimed Moscow Lomonosov University. With over 20 years of coaching under his belt, his research and practical experience encompasses argumentation theory and practice, logic, logical philosophy, philosophy of language, cognitive science, and neurophilosophy. He authored and co-authored over 60 publications and presented at a number of international conferences.

Who should attend: CEOs, COOs, Marketing staff

Fun in Legoland: How to Craft a Killer Presentation

As the public speaking skills are surely a staple in one’s job, so is the practice of designing a slide deck to impress the audience and help you deliver powerful messages to get the best of rewards, namely, everyone’s taking their eyes off the screens of their devices.

And let’s be honest: the business of developing a presentation typically is at the very bottom of our daily priorities, and we yet need to clear it with Marketing and get a nod from the grumpy boss. Short of time and overstretched, and oftentimes not a native English speaker, where to turn to for inspiration and steal great but diverse pieces to have them click into place?

In the session, you will be offered a crash course of how to assemble a presentation quickly and seamlessly and win the audience with simple yet efficient tricks in no time.

The course is delivered by Leonid Todorov, GM APTLD. With over 30 years of expertise in PR, marketing, copywriting, and public presentation areas, he is going to share with you simple but efficient practices that should unlock your creativity and save time while developing your next PPT.

Note: On both training days, lunch will be served in La Brasserie, ground floor; and coffee breaks in the prefunction area, next to the Silk Road conference rooms.
